

ROYAL DANISH NAVY NAVAL CADET

1838

NOSE

Elegant, deep nose with liquorice root, orange peel, coconut, high ester aromas, mint, and a touch of fruit cellar

FINISH

Long and lingering, the impression changes from fruity and supple to more soft and warm notes of leather

TASTE

A sweet, round, and bold mouthfeel that balances the richness with the green notes of eucalyptus and mint, the yellow notes of citrus, and the bitterness of liquorice and balsamic

COLOR

Polished rosewood with warm glow

The A.H. Riise Royal Danish Navy series is created to honour the proud history and long-lasting traditions of the Royal Danish Navy. In the core of this history rests the oldest Naval Academy in the world, established in 1701.

The A.H. Riise Naval Cadet 42% blend is the perfect balance between tradition and strength. The various distillates are reminiscent of salt water, tarred ropes, and tropical fruits. If you close your eyes, you can picture yourself in front of the massive bronze cannons. The sweet nectar perfectly harmonises with the potent alcohol. It is a truly magnificent experience.

DAGGERS FOR CADETS, SABRES FOR OFFICERS

Since 1848, a uniform dagger M/1848 became mandatory and regulated for the Naval Cadet Corps. It has remained largely unchanged since 1848. The cadet dagger is worn in a black sheath hung over the right shoulder. When a naval cadet is appointed Naval Officer, the cadet dagger is replaced with a sabre.

THE HISTORY OF A.H. RIISE
In 1808, the Danish Government officially appointed Albert Riise as the captain of the ship 'The Svanen' in the Caribbean, and granted him the right to produce rum in the plantation. He used the best ingredients and his own expertise to create a rum that was not only delicious but also healthy. The A.H. Riise Company moved to the United States in 1848 and was awarded a Gold Medal at the World Exhibition in Chicago.
